

Julie Chronister:

Julie Chronister is an assistant professor and rehabilitation counselor training program faculty member. She received her PhD in Rehabilitation Psychology from University of Wisconsin-Madison, her Master's degree in Rehabilitation Counseling from University of Massachusetts-Boston, and her Bachelor's Degree from Boston University. Her teaching areas include the counseling process and psychological assessment, and her research interests include social support and coping within the context of psychosocial adjustment to disability and chronic illness, and the training needs of rehabilitation counselors. Her present research is focused on the role of social support and coping in mediating internalized stigma among persons with psychiatric disabilities. She is co-author/editor of the book "Understanding psychosocial adjustment to chronic illness and disability: A handbook for evidenced-based practitioners in rehabilitation" and has authored/co-authored several rehabilitation related articles and book chapters. She has an established track record of submitting and receiving rehabilitation related service and research grants. She is also an editorial consultant/reviewer for five rehabilitation and allied health peer-review journals. Dr. Chronister has worked in the field of rehabilitation counseling for over 15 years in a number of capacities including rehabilitation counselor, community-based program director, and rehabilitation counseling faculty. She has clinical experience working with adolescents and adults with a wide array of disabilities in inpatient, outpatient, and community-based settings.
