

Shemya Vaughn is an assistant professor and rehabilitation counselor training program faculty member. She received her PhD in Rehabilitation Counselor Education from Michigan State University, her Master's degree in Rehabilitation Counseling from Maryville University, and her Bachelor's Degree in Psychology from Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville. Her teaching areas include disability issues, substance abuse, and psychology and her research interests include employment outcomes for women of color and sexuality and disability. Her present research is focused on the employment outcomes for women of color with psychiatric disabilities within the state-federal vocational rehabilitation system. She is also an ad-hoc reviewer for Rehabilitation Education. Dr. Vaughn has worked in the field of human services for over 10 years in a number of capacities including rehabilitation counselor, therapist, researcher, community-based crisis intervention specialist, and community college instructor. She has clinical experience working with adolescents and adults with both physical and psychiatric disabilities.